11. AOE Chinese Edition

AOE Chinese Edition

The AOE Chinese edition (the Chinese edition of Annals of Esophagus) is a Chinese-language column that addresses the growing need for trusted medical information in China. The initiative of the AOE Chinese edition aims to raise awareness of medical advances among clinicians through translated content, enhancing the links between Chinese scientists and the international medical community.

The translation of a selection of full-text content from AOE applies rigorous standards to ensure accuracy and quality control. The AOE Chinese edition will deliver the quality clinical and scientific content to the Chinese medical and clinical research community.

Shamus R. Carr

Dr. Carr

Shamus Carr, MD, is currently an associate research physician and staff thoracic surgeon in the Thoracic Surgery Branch at the National Cancer Institute, National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland. Clinically, he specializes in minimally invasive approaches to thoracic malignancies. His research focuses on exploring genetic and epigenetic alterations in early-stage lung cancer and ways to both identify and treat those most likely to recur.

Dr. Carr believes that academic writing is critically important, as reporting advances has the opportunity to help hundreds or thousands of patients that are cared for by other physicians.

Dr. Carr also identifies two of the most common problems encountered in academic writing. First, as an author of a manuscript, one needs to keep an open mind to constructive criticism for reviewers. However, the peer-review process can sometimes be difficult. While the intention of most reviewers is to help clarify the manuscript, care must be exercised so as not to alter the message based solely on the reviewers' comments. Second is that editors should do a better job when a paper is rejected without being sent out for peer review, briefly explaining the reason without it being a templated response. This feedback could be extremely helpful for authors.
